Call for Papers for a Special Issue:
Working With Aspiring Olympic Athletes

Submissions Accepted: June 1, 2020, to December 1, 2021

All scholars and practitioners are invited to submit practical and research case studies relating to Olympic qualification and athlete support surrounding the Tokyo 2020/2021 Olympic Games. This Special Issue could include various foci such as the uncertainty of working toward a new calendar event, event postponement, athlete refocusing strategies, event-based holistic mental health for Olympic aspirants, and uncertainties and tensions caused by unforeseeable societal circumstances related to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Case Studies in Sport and Exercise Psychology readily accepts submissions beginning June 1, 2020, through December 1, 2021. Authors are encouraged to contextualize their case studies in relation to how challenges and solutions are encountered and resolved in their host country and sport. Submissions should be situated in local training and performance environments and composed of athletes, providers, and, as suitable, broader sport organizations. Author-related backgrounds and idiosyncratic research and/or practice could be used to add richness to submissions and reader understanding.

Manuscripts developed for this special issue must be submitted through ScholarOne at https://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/hk_cssep, where a dedicated submission type is listed for selection.

All inquiries can be sent to
Robert Schinke, rschinke@laurentian.ca
Editor of Case Studies in Sport and Exercise Psychology